BY: NATHANAEL S. KELLEY, ESQ.

1 THE COURT: Suppose there was that evidence in this 2 case, would it then be the trustee's position that they're 3 customers?

4 MS. VANDERWAL: If they -- just because BLMIS or there 5 were other people who had invested?

6 THE COURT: Let's say we got an affidavit from 7 somebody who said, you know, I told -- the managing partner 8 told me that this money was going to be invested through the 9 partnership with BLMIS and that's why I did it.

10 MS. VANDERWAL: And our position is that that would 11 not be sufficient --

12 THE COURT: Why not?

13 MS. VANDERWAL: -- because it doesn't satisfy the most 14 essential factor that has been identified from this body of 15 case law which is that the purported customer owned the funds 16 that are invested with BLMIS.

17 THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

18 MS. VANDERWAL: Thank you.

19 THE COURT: S&P Associates and P&S Associates,
20 collectively "the Partnerships", are Florida general
21 partnerships that had accounts with BLMIS and essentially acted 22 as feeder funds investing all of their partnership funds with 23 BLMIS. This motion concerns the customer status of the general
24 partners of the partnerships. They never invested directly 25 with BLMIS. Instead, they invested directly with the

1 partnerships or indirectly with entities that became general
2 partners of the partnerships and invested their own funds 3 through the partnerships.

4 For the sake of convenience, I will refer to anyone on 5 invested directly or indirectly with the partnerships as 6 partners.

7 Except as noted, the facts are not in dispute and are 8 derived from the declarations of Bik, BIK, Cheema, C-H-E-E-M-A, 9 and Vineet, V-I-N-E-E-T, Sehgal, SEHGAL, submitted on this 10 motion and the documents attached to those declarations. The 11 partnerships were formed in 1992 and were governed by nearly 12 identical partnership agreements. Their purpose was to invest 13 in all types of market-placed securities, Partnership
14 Agreements, Section 2.02, and were funded with initial capital
15 contributions by the partners. Partnership Agreements, Section 16 4.01. Michael D. Sullivan and Greg Powell served as the 17 managing general partners and had the exclusive authority to 18 manage and control the day-to-day operations of the partnership 19 and maintain the partnership property. Partnership Agreements, 20 Section 8.01. Nevertheless, the general partners could have a 21 say in the selection of brokers. For example, a majority of 22 the partners in interest could cause the partnership to 23 terminate or allow a specific broker selected by the majority 24 and grant their selected broker discretionary investment powers
25 with the partnerships' investment funds. Partnership

1 Agreement, Section 2.02.

2 In addition, the partnership agreements at Section
3 8.04 stated that the partners would review any broker's 4 engagement with the partnership at the regular quarterly 5 meetings.

6 As noted, the partnerships maintained accounts with 7 BLMIS and following the commencement of the SIPA liquidation, 8 filed customer claims with the trustee based on their alleged 9 account statements dated November 30, 2008. According to the 10 trustee, the partnerships' claims have been allowed in an 11 amended amount. Each has received either payment of or the 12 benefit of a 500,000 dollar SIPC advance and interim
13 distributions have been made to each of them from the customer 14 fund maintained by the trustee.

15 Numerous partners also filed their own customer 16 claims. The trustee disallowed those claims on the basis that 17 the partners were not customers of BLMIS within the meaning of 18 SIPA. One hundred fifty-eight partners objected to his claim 19 determinations and this motion seeks to affirm his disallowance 20 of the partners' claims. The motion elicited the response from 21 78 partners represented by the law firm, Becker and Poliakoff
22 LLP. Although approximately 50 percent of the objecting 23 partners did not respond to the motion, I will refer to the 24 entire group as the objecting partners.

25 In SIPC v. BLMIS, 515 B.R. 161 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2014),

1 the Court reviewed the decisions by this Court, the district 2 court and the Second Circuit relating to the customer status of 3 persons who did not have accounts with BLMIS and instead 4 invested with entities that, in turn, invested directly with 5 BLMIS. To summarize briefly, customer status under SIPA is 6 narrowly interpreted. The "critical aspect" of the customer 7 definition is "the entrustment of cash or securities to the 8 broker-dealer for the purposes of trading securities". The 9 indicia of customer status include a direct financial 10 relationship with BLMIS, a property interest in the funds
11 invested directly with BLMIS, securities accounts with BLMIS, 12 control over the account holders' investments with BLMIS and 13 identification of the alleged customer in BLMIS' books and 14 records. Finally, the claimant has the burden of showing that 15 he or she is a customer, id. at page 165-68.

16 The objecting partners have failed to sustain their 17 burden of proof. They did not entrust any cash or securities
18 with BLMIS. They invested with the partnerships who, in turn, 19 invested with BLMIS. They have no direct financial 20 relationship with BLMIS. They did not deposit money with or 21 withdraw money from BLMIS or receive investment statements or 22 tax statements in their own names from BLMIS. The documents 23 produced by the trustee show that all communications with or by 24 the partnerships went through Sullivan or Powell and all 25 deposits and withdrawals were made by them in the names of the 1 partnerships. Thus, even if BLMIS knew or surmised that the 2 partnerships' BLMIS accounts were funded with partners'

3 contributions, there is no evidence that BLMIS maintained 4 records identifying the partners or even knew who they were,
5 and the fact remains that the partners did not entrust anything
6 to BLMIS.

7 The objecting partners nevertheless contend that the 8 controlling decisions including Kruse v. Bricklayers and 9 Bricklayers and Allied Craftsman Local 2 Annuity Fund, (In re 10 BLMIS), 708 F.3d 422 (2nd Cir. 2013), and SIPC v. Morgan, 11 Kennedy and Co., 533 F.2d 1314 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied. 426
12 U.S. 936 (1976), are distinguishable for three reasons. First, 13 the partners had a specific interest under Florida law in all 14 partnership property invested with BLMIS. Second, BLMIS knew 15 that each partner had made a decision to entrust his or her 16 funds with BLMIS. Third, the partners had the ability to 17 control the investment decisions because they had the authority 18 to allow or terminate a specific broker and allow a broker to 19 have discretionary investment powers with the partnerships' 20 funds.

21 The partners had no interest in the property at the 22 partnerships under current Florida law. Florida Revised 23 Uniform Partnership Act ("Florida revised UPA") declares that a 24 partnership is a legal entity distinct from its partners.
25 Florida statute Section 620.8201(1). "Property acquired by a

1 partnership is property of the partnership and not of the 2 partners individually," id. Section 620.8203, and "Partnership 3 property is owned by the partnership as an entity not by the 4 partners as co-owners", id. Section 620.8501.

5 In addition, the partnership agreements provide that 6 all property acquired by the partnerships would be owned by and 7 in the name of the partnership and each partner expressly 8 waived his right to require the partition of any partnership 9 property. Partnership Agreement, Section 6.01.

10 The objecting partners did not dispute the current 11 state of the law or the text of the partnership agreements.
12 Instead, they argue that the partnerships were organized in 13 1992 under the former Florida Uniform Partnership Act ("Florida 14 UPA") and Section 620.675 of that law provided, among other 15 things, that "at the inception of an incident to the 16 partnership relationship, each partner acquires certain 17 property rights [including] his rights in specific partnership 18 property."

19 The Florida UPA was repealed by the Florida Revised 20 UPA, effective January 1, 1998, see 6 - Part 1 U.L.A. 24
21 (2001), but the objecting partners imply that the repeal did 22 not affect the rights granted under the repealed law. Assuming 23 the former law governed the partners' rights, they still had no 24 right to the funds in the partnerships' BLMIS accounts. Former 25 Florida statute Section 620.68 provided that subject to the

1 Florida UPA and the partnership agreement, a partner could not 2 possess specific partnership property for non-partnership
3 purposes absent the consent of all partners. There is no 4 evidence of such consent here. But even if there was, it would 5 be irrelevant. The partnership agreements provided, as noted, 6 that the partners had no right to the partnership property and 7 waived their right to partition. Accordingly, the partner had 8 no right to possess the partnerships' BLMIS investments under 9 the prior law and certainly has no right in the specific 10 partnership property under the current law.

11 Next, the objecting partners offered no admissible 12 evidence to support their contention that BLMIS knew that they 13 had invested with the partnerships because they wanted to 14 invest with BLMIS. Instead, the objecting partners cite to 15 their responses to the trustee's request for admissions. The 16 responses were signed by Helen Chaitman, Esquire, the attorney 17 for the objecting partners. And the relevant response consists 18 of multiple hearsay. It is offered to prove that the objecting 19 partners told the managing partners who told BLMIS that the 20 objecting partners were investing in the partnerships in order 21 to invest in BLMIS. It is noteworthy that no objecting partner 22 offered an affidavit to that effect that he told the managing 23 general partners that he was investing in the partnerships in 24 order to invest in BLMIS. Nor did the objecting partners
25 submit an affidavit from either of the managing general

1 partners attesting to what they told representatives of BLMIS.

2 Furthermore, the partnership agreements did not 3 mention Madoff, a significant omission given that the 4 partnership agreements were dated December 11, 1992 and that 5 BLMIS trading agreements were dated December 28, 1992. Thus, 6 the partnerships with BLMIS investors from the onset. Nor is 7 there any documentary evidence in the form of offering 8 memoranda or partnership meeting minutes indicating that the 9 partnerships solicited partners with a promise to invest in 10 BLMIS, reviewed and/or approved BLMIS as a broker, invested 11 BLMIS with discretionary trading authority or that the 12 partnership ever informed the partners of its relationship with 13 Madoff or BLMIS until Madoff's arrest. In fact, when Sullivan 14 informed the P&S partners that Madoff had been arrested and all 15 of the partnerships' funds had been invested with BLMIS, his 16 letter did not suggest that the partners already knew that the 17 partnership was invested with BLMIS.

18 But even if the objecting partners or some of them
19 sought to invest in the partnerships in order to invest 20 indirectly with BLMIS, they still would not be customers. They 21 entrusted their money to the partnerships not BLMIS and they 22 dealt with the partnerships not BLMIS. However, the 23 partnerships hold allowed customer claims and received 24 distributions. The partners have the right under Florida's 25 partnership laws and the partnership agreements to look to the 1 partnerships to recover at least some of their losses.

2 Lastly, although the partnership agreements authorized 3 the majority of the partners to direct the partnerships to 4 select or terminate a particular broker or arm a broker with 5 the discretionary trading authority, there is no evidence that 6 this ever occurred. Moreover, the right belonged to 51 percent 7 of the partners acting as a majority and did not empower any 8 individual to dictate an investment, select the broker or 9 withdraw money from BLMIS. As an individual, the partner could 10 only withdraw his investment from the partnership. He had no 11 right or ability to control his "share" of the partnerships'
12 investments with BLMIS.

13 But even if the partners had some level of control 14 over the partnerships' investments, "that fact, standing alone, 15 would be insufficient to confer 'customer' status on appellants
16 [the partners] given that, individually, they 'made no
17 purchases, transacted no business, and had no dealings 18 whatsoever' with BLMIS." Kruse, 708 F.3d at 427 (quoting 19 Morgan, Kennedy, 533 F.2d at 1318).

20 Accordingly, the objecting partners have failed to 21 sustain their burden of proving that they are SIPA customers of 22 BLMIS. The Court has considered the objecting partners
23 remaining arguments and concludes that they lack merit. Settle 24 order on notice to counsel to the objecting partners and to the 25 objecting partners that appeared pro se.
